“Parris, when at Opunake met Matakatea, who with some of his people came in from the bush to see him. They occupied the greater part of the day with their grievances. Parris told Matakatea that he believed the Government would take his cause into consideration. This appeared to give him satisfaction.”<sup>101</sup>

We are informed that the body of the unfortunate Captain Fisk, who was drowned from on board the ‘Rangatira’ on her last passage up from Wanganui, has been found cast ashore a little this side of the wreck of the Lord Worsley, at Te Namu, and has been buried at Opunake. A pocket knife and a key found upon him have been forwarded to the Civil Commissioner here, Mr Parris.<sup>104</sup>

Lieutenant Colonel Hamley, commanding the Troops in Taranaki issued instructions to Capt. Doran, of the 50th Regiment, commanding the post of Opunake, to search the coast for Mr Fisk of Wanganui. The body was discovered, identified, in interred with every mark of respect, near the redoubt.<sup>105</sup>

Taikomako, the successor of Te Ua, on hearing that the troops were about to be withdrawn from Opunake and Warea, expressed his satisfaction, saying that in that case they (the Taranakis) should cease doing anything more at the pakehas; but it is probable that by the withdrawal of the troops they understand the giving back to them of all their land south of the Stoney River, and when they find themselves mistaken in this their good behaviour may be of short duration.... Opunake will be garrisoned in future by the late Arama Karaka's people, in whose charge the redoubt and buildings will be left. It is said the Government intend supplying these natives with guns and ammunition, but we can hardly credit it.<sup>107</sup>

"As some measure of protection against the Hauhaus, orders were given to arm certain loyal villagers in the coastal area. Fifty stand of long Enfield rifles, accoutrements with 2,500 rounds of ball ammunition and caps were issued to Arama Karaka's (Matakaha) and Matakatea's (Umuroa) kaingas. With the withdrawal of the Imperial Troops it was found necessary to relinquish the Opunake military post and so the loyal Maoris were left in charge of the area."<sup>108</sup>

“... the Taranaki Civil Commissioner reported a large allocation of 53,376 acres to Wiremu Kingi Matakatea and Arama Karaka on behalf of the Ngatirongo and Ngatihaumia hapus of the Taranaki tribe. These grants which included practically all lands between the Moutoti and Taungatara streams, less the Opunake township area, and two military land grants, were made for loyalty to the Crown, and were intended to satisfy all the legitimate claims of their hapu, both resident and absentee.”<sup>113</sup>

“... martial law across the province, having been lifted, a grant of 50,000 acres of confiscated land was made to William King and Arama Karaka and members of their hapu, both resident and absentee. This was the Opunake block which extended from the Mototoi River (Oaonui) to the Taungatara.”<sup>114</sup>

The arms previously issued to local loyal Maori were withdrawn as it was felt that the “improved feeling amongst the Natives made this desirable and safe.”<sup>115</sup>
